

City of Big Readers

48. Sarah Paretsky writes about a private investigator, V.I. Warshawski, who lives on the southwest corner of Belmont and Racine. What is the name of the apartment complex (it's written next to the door on Racine)?
49. In addition to naming a street after the German poet Johann Christoph Friedrich von Schiller (Question 1!), the city allowed a statue of him to be erected at Stockton and Webster. What symbol is below his feet?
50. Our other German writer, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, also has a statue in Chicago. Looking south from Sheridan and Diversey, it's pretty hard to miss. Who is it from?
51. Half of The Devil in the the White City is about serial killer H.H. Holmes; the other half is about the 1893 World's Fair, which took place along Midway Plaisance. About halfway down, at 1130 Midway Plaisance N, you'll find an ice skating rink. When was it established?
52. There's a delightful mural on the wall on 16th Street, just west of Paulina, that pays tribute to many of the books covered in this rally. What does it say in the seal on the spine of The Jungle?
53. The Third Rail is about a murderer who kills his victims along Chicago's El system, with the first murder happening at the Southport brown line station, 3411 N Southport. What lives at the west stairs of the station?
54. If you're feeling fancy enough to enter the lobby at the Four Seasons Chicago, 120 E Delaware, you'll see a porcelain sculpture of books in a bookcase. Outside, there's a man hailing a taxi. What color is his tie?
55. There's a park at the corner of Lincoln and Webster with an iconic storybook character welcoming visitors. What are the initials on his leg?
56. The Harold Washington Library at State and Van Buren is the largest public library in the world. Just to the left of the Van Buren entrance is a picture of a woman reading a book. Who is the author of this book?
57. Speaking of libraries, one of the coolest features of the University of Chicago's newest, located on the northeast corner of 57th and Ellis, is the fact that books are retrieved from the stacks by a robot. Write the name of the library exactly as it appears on the building.
58. Michael Harvey, author of the Chicago Way series of mysteries set in Chicago, co-owns the Hidden Shamrock, 2723 N Halsted. What 6 sport flags are in the windows on the second floor?
59. If a book was written about your team or car, what would it's title be?
